

Strathmore Law Review Call for Submissions

Announcing the Second Yash and Jill Cottrell Ghai Writing Prize

THEME: LAW TOWARDS A BETTER AFRICAN SOCIETY

Legal scholars can seldom engineer social transformation where there are no fora to refine and host their ideas. The Strathmore Law Review (SLR) is proud to be an excellent consistent platform where these scholars can express their ideas. It is in this spirit that the SLR welcomes submissions for its Seventh Volume to be published in the 2021-2022 academic year under the theme 'Law Towards a Better African Society'.

To this end, the SLR invites submissions focusing on the African context either as a continent or any part of the African society—that is, at the national or sub-national level. The invited submissions may focus on a broad range of issues in any field of law or law-related interdisciplinary academic scholarship. Examples of the submissions include but are not limited to, law and social change, legal history, commercial law, housing law, labour law, intellectual property law, constitutional law, gender and the law, law and decolonisation, law and globalisation, law and policy or governance, employment law, public international law, law and religion, and human rights law.

Additionally, for the second time, the SLR will award the Yash and Jill Cottrell Ghai Writing Prize. This award carries a cash prize of USD 700. The winning article will be selected through a joint decision of the Strathmore Law Review Board and a special committee. The Prize will be awarded to the article that best captures the Volume's theme.

The call for submissions closes at Midnight (EAT) on Friday, 27 August 2021. All submissions should be emailed to lawreview@strathmore.edu
